JCU Occupational Therapy (OT) students learn the skills and knowledge they need to apply contemporary therapeutic approaches to enable people to participate in the activities that are important to them. Occupational therapists play an important role in building more inclusive societies.

The Bachelor of Occupational Therapy (Honours) gives students a solid grounding in human anatomy, physiology, psycho-emotional and lifespan development, as well as an understanding of health promotion and health care, particularly in rural, remote, Indigenous and tropical contexts. JCU OT students work with people in identifying meaningful activities, understanding and using personal strengths and overcoming barriers in order to lead fulfilling lives.

A strong focus on experiential learning at JCU assists students to become client-centred and holistic health professionals. Students have the opportunity to observe and develop clinical skills at the JCU Health Occupational Therapy Clinic. Students complete over 1,000 hours of clinical placements in a range of healthcare settings.

Occupational therapists work in many different industry sectors and workplaces, both in and out of the health and hospital sector. They are experts at working with people of all ages to enhance personal life skills and to adjust the environment around them to participate as fully as possible in work, everyday life, interests and hobbies. Occupational therapists might work with children in schools, in workplace rehabilitation, mental health, aged care facilities, management of life with chronic illness or injury and many other settings.

Graduates are prepared for work in a variety of practice settings, both within Australia and overseas. An OT qualification can be used to apply for professional registration in many different countries.

“Learning to become an occupational therapist has given me the chance to really make a difference in people’s lives, whether it’s enhancing childhood development, providing rehabilitation, promoting independence, or improving health and wellbeing. This would not have been possible without the support and guidance from the academic staff and JCU community who have inspired me to become the best occupational therapist I can be.”

Mackenzie Mete

BACHELOR OF OCCUPATIONAL THERAPY (HONOURS)

“Students undertaking JCU’s Bachelor of Occupational Therapy (Honours) are presented with the fantastic opportunity of developing specialist knowledge and skills across a wide range of practice fields. Our graduates will work to promote health and wellbeing among individuals and groups by enabling participation in the various roles and activities that give them purpose and meaning. I take great satisfaction in getting to know students as individuals and helping them to recognise, embrace and develop the unique strengths and qualities that they can draw on in delivering authentic, dynamic and informed therapy provision.”

Daniel Lowrie

SENIOR LECTURER, OCCUPATIONAL THERAPY

Career Opportunities

JCU Occupational Therapy (Honours) graduates have meaningful and rewarding careers providing essential services in communities throughout Australia.

Graduates gain employment in public and private hospitals, rehabilitation units, community health centres, aged care facilities, mental health services, schools, independent living centres, and in private practice.

You may also find employment in industry research, education, and training.

Upon graduation, you can register for practice in Australia through the Occupational Therapists Board of Australia Health Professional Registration Agency \(AHPRA\), and become a member of OT Australia—The Australian Association of Occupational Therapists. Graduates may also register to practice in New Zealand and apply to practice internationally.
